Merely, this article explores aspects of hacking subject game(s), including instances of hacking and consequences for hacking. If you believe some of this content is inappropriate, please contact an administrator on their message wall, or leave a message on the talk page. Settings icon for a player account flagged as a banned account, often for hacking Hacking is a process of manipulating with in-game code of a game to favor the player. It is possible to hack into Bloons TD 6 to manipulate specific aspects of the game, either for cheating purposes or to add a new perspective to playing the game, though most players who hack simply exploit the game for the former option. Player accounts can be flagged if a player hacks into the game in any way shape or form. Most of the time, player accounts with a history of hacking are completely banned, but in later games it is possible to reverse the flag by contacting Ninja Kiwi. For most purposes, this topic refers to mostly hacking. For more information about cheating, see the Cheating page. Pre-BTD5 generation games Not much hacking has been known for pre-BTD5 generation games, although it's possible to play Flash games with hacked cash. It is likely possible to hack into any Flash game in Ninja Kiwi Archives, but mods for pre-BTD5 generation games are highly inaccessible outside of Flash games copied and modded by third-party sources. But since Adobe Flash Player will officially lose support starting from January 2021, the amount of hacking for pre-BTD5 generation games will likely be very limited. Not much is known about the consequences of hacking for pre-BTD5 generation games, as there is almost no interaction for those games, with exception of in-app purchases via NK Coins. BTD5 generation games on Flash As for all BTD5 generation Flash games linked by Ninja Kiwi account, the player's Ninja Kiwi account will be banned if caught hacking. Achievements will also be revoked for an account who is caught hacking. BTD5 Flash Possible to hack in the game. Hacking is less of an issue than BTDB Flash or BMC Flash, but being caught hacking (with either Experience or suspiciously high rounds on leaderboards) will revoke access to linking with the player's Ninja Kiwi account. Online features such as Co-Op Mode, Achievements, and Daily Challenges are banned. The rest of BTD5 Flash can be played, however, using a guest account. BTDB Flash Screen where a player has been detected to be a hacker. If the player is caught hacking, the player's account will be banned from playing the game. The screen immediately reveals a troll-face Dart Monkey prior to getting banned. BMC Flash It is possible to hack into the game. For instance, hacks for obtaining exceedingly high City Cash from Contested Territory is/was possible. Getting caught hacking will cause the game account to become revoked access to playing BMC Flash. BTD5 generation games on Mobile or Console BTD5 Mobile There have been several mods in BTD5 Mobile. There is a flag system, most likely, but it only realistically affects Co-Op Mode and Weekly Leaderboards. Similarly should occur for Bloons TD 5 Steam, the Steam version of the game, and Bloons TD 5 Console, the console versions for the game. BTDB Mobile Mods are quite available and relatively easy to do, due to the 2D nature of the game. Tower mods, hypersonic mods, card mods, game mode mods, and hacked Sandbox Mode (at least prior to Version 6.9) mods are some of the few mods available, most of which are showcased in some YouTube videos relating to BTDB Mobile. If the player is caught hacking (or attempts to play BTDB mods in a quick match/arena game), they will be placed in the hacker pool. In the hacker pool, they may only play with other players who are also in the hacker pool. BMC Mobile There are currently no online reports of hacking in these games, although this game is entirely possible to hack into. Just like the previous two games, there is a mod available. Bloons Supermonkey series Much like BMC Mobile, this game can be hacked, although to a small degree. No adverse effects have been reported yet, nor have any mods been released for this game. BTD6 On the settings button (click to enlarge), a player with a flagged account There are many forms of ways to hack into the game. Creation of custom mods in BTD6 has been discovered as early as around October 2020. However, game hacks by creating pirated versions of BTD6, hacking in infinite cash, or hacking medals were released very early on during the game's lifecycle by online hackers. Hacking can cause the account to become flagged, which will lead to Ninja Kiwi to investigate the player's account for any suspicious behavior, and eventually may cause the account to become "banned" if found guilty. Those affected by the flag will show a subtle pair of leaves above the settings button. While not always fatal, a flagged account will show signs of a banned account; in that case, attempting to access a completed Race Event will be shown as "empty". It is possible for the account to be unflagged, but only if the player contacts Ninja Kiwi and the support team approves of the decision to unflag the player's account. The process of doing so is highly unreliable (i.e. low unflagging rate), and therefore it is highly discouraged to get flagged in the first place. It is possible to also get the hacking flag by playing the game legitimately but with very unusual statistics (e.g. ending with $100,000+ in a Race Event, or winning Race Events with a lower time than usual relative to previous medals awarded by the player). Being unfortunately paired with a hacker in a public Co-Op pool can also cause the player to be flagged (or infecting them). If the player ends up receiving a hacking flag, the common signs of being in the hacker pool for Co-Op Mode include: Getting continually paired with players who suddenly earn extreme amounts of cash or otherwise use an unusual number of Powers in the first few seconds of a round. Repetitive spamming of unusual cash amounts to another player during the first round and then later that player gaining an extreme amount of cash all of a sudden. Even if there is no hacking flag shown in the main menu, a pirated version of BTD6 is prone to issues with updating new versions, not to mention that there is risk of containing malware. Players accounts that are truly banned will receive the following changes: There will be two leaves on top of the settings button to indicate the presence of such flag. Players will not be listed on the leaderboards on Race Events and therefore can no longer gain rewards off them. Players can no longer join public lobbies on Co-Op Mode. Instead, they are placed in the hacker pool. These accounts still have access to these features: All features on Challenge Editor are still enabled, and as such they can still play, create, and make challenges. Odyssey Mode will run as normal, as it does not have any competitive online aspects. Various mods have been made for BTD6, many of which are often used in a non-invasive nature as a form of the community showcasing new perspectives to the game, including: Tower mods (e.g. new towers, new classes, rearranged classes, etc.) Bloom mods (e.g. regrow on MOAB-class bloons, excessive HP MOABs or excessive HP Ceramics) Projectile mods (e.g. hypersonic attack speed, aggressively homing projectiles) Graphics mods (e.g. rotating towers, rotating the entire game screen in 3D) Map mods (e.g. inserting old maps adapted in BTD6 style, inserting popular meme maps) Game mode mods (e.g. every X seconds a new gameplay change happens) Upgrade mods (e.g. removing activated abilities and replacing with a weaker permanent ability, price adjustments, etc.) Rohan Spibo from Ninja Kiwi says that the use of hacks in the BTD6 game should only be done on a secondary account and only involve elements of purely private gameplay, such as the aforementioned harmless mods. Link. Bloons Adventure Time TD Hackers with impossible rounds in martian games (click to enlarge) Bloons Adventure Time TD is entirely possible to hack into. These hacks are most commonly absurdly high rounds in Martian Games, going as high as the billions (not legitimately feasible as a Martian Games event runs for 2 days, or 172,800 seconds, and completing one billion rounds on time requires completing each round in at most under a fraction of a millisecond on average), as reported from online communities. Other than that, there are currently no other online reports of hacking into this game. Bloons Pop! In Bloons Pop!, there is a hacker pool system incorporated into the game. However, there is currently no online-posted evidence to how the hacker pool system for Bloons Pop! works other than the existence of such. Navbox for "gaming community" will come soon.
